The traditional view of management assumes that a manager's job is to run an apparatus -- perhaps a corporate Department or a team of programmers. There are clear inputs and outputs and expected results from the engin... responsible for. The manager's job is to keep the machine running smoothly...Read More

Description

Testing the problem-solving abilities of your candidate is especially useful if you're hiring for a role like IT support or development. Try setting up a flawed piece of tech or code and asking your candidate to fix it in a set time limit. When they've finished, ask them to explain how they identified the problem and how they chose to solve it.
